The Present and the Past

Building Memories: Encoding and Retrieval

and Encoding

The process of forming memories involves encoding information in the brain. Memories are formed through a complex interplay of various brain regions and neurotransmitters. Encoding occurs when information is transformed into a neural representation that can be stored and retrieved later. There are three main types of memory: sensory memory, short-term memory, and long-term memory. Sensory memory holds information for a brief period, while short-term memory holds information for a few minutes, and long-term memory holds information indefinitely.
William James (1842-1910), American philosopher and psychologist, is often referred to as the father of modern psychology.
